That Hope Is Dead.

BY T. B. H.

Oh, wonder not that bitter tiass,
Thus unrebuked should start,
For one more precious hope, alas,
Has died from out my heart.

Another drop of bitterness
Has mingled in life's cup;
Another bud of promised joy,
Untimely withered up.

Another rankling carb of grief
Into my heart is cast;
And on my path a shadow lies,
Far heavier than the last.

One memory more, of sad import,
Is to my keeping given;
And from its place an anchor lost,
To which my soul has striven.

The Disconsolate.

I am very sad to-night, love;—
I am pining here alone;—
My heart has lost its light, love;—
It seems not like my own.

Oh that I could weep, love;—
Tears might relieve my pain,
And bring back to my heart, love,
Its own true light again.

I can not go to sleep, love;—
My eyes refuse to close;—
For, oh! I am dying of grief, love;—
How can I get repose.

I am going far away, love;—
Far away to a distant shore;
And I hope to meet thee there, love;—
And meet thee to part no more,

The Last Farewell.

Fare-thee-well, we part forever;—
All regrets are now in vain;—
Fate decrees tnat we must sever—
Never more to meet again.
Fare-thee-well, I am going to leave thee;—
I am going to leave the, dearest one;—
And when I am gone oh think no more of me,
For I never shall return.

Other skies may bend above thee;—
Other hearts bow at thy shrine;—
But, oh, no other heart can love thee
With the constancy of mine.
I am going to leave thee, oh my dearest;—
I am going to leave thee dearest one;—
And when I am gone, oh think no more of me
For I never shall return.

Ludovico the Moor.

BY ANNA M. CARTER.

Everybody in the city seemed rushing towards one spot, one center of attraction, the cathedral of Milan. Everybody seemed happy, expectant. In the magnificent cathedral was to be solemnized that day the marriage between Giovanni Galezano, Duke of Milan. and Isabella, grand-daughter of the King of Naples. Very little had been heard concerning the bride; her beauty had not been extolled and commented upon as is often the case, and besides the interest always felt upon such an occasion, was the desire to see if Isabella of Naples was beautiful. The young Duke of Milan was brave, handsome and manly, a model of virtue, totally unlike his father, who was sensual, tyranical and weak-minded. Giovanni was loved by all his friends, and adored by the people—he was the pet of the Milanese. Always ready to listen, to the troubles of the people, he did not remain a mere passive listener, but set about to redress the wrongs as far as lay in his power. Whoever applied to him was sure to obtain justice, and speedily, too, for the duke held the opinion that tardy justice was oftener worse than a sudden wrong. Thus, on the day in question, Giovanni Galeazzo's wedding day, the people rejoiced with one accord. All the streets through which the marriage procession was to pass were decorated with flags, ribbons and garlands, while the pavements were strewn with flowers and fragrant herbs.

The hour arrived, and with it the marriage procession. At the vast portal of the church it was met by a number of young girls, the fairest in Milan, bearing beautiful flowers and wreaths, which they threw in the pathway of the bridal pair; over the steps, up the broad nave, even to the foot of the holy altar, the maidens spread the choicest, fragrant flowers, then stood on each side eager to watch the bride. Almost an audible exclamation of delight ran through the crowd, as, robed in white satin, shrouded in the richest lace, and resplendent with diamonds, leaning on the arm of Giovanna Galeazzo, Duke of Milan, came Isabella of Naples. The people rejoiced, and almost worshiped the bride, for she was as beautiful as an angel—few people had more than dreamed of such exquisite beauty. All the court, all the relations were there, save one, the uncle of the duke, Ludovico the Moor (il Moro). The marriage ceremony being completed, the bridal train turned, and proceeded to the palace of the duke, where was prepared a stumptous feast. At the gate of the palace they were met by Ludovico.

"I regret. my dear nephew, that I was unavoidably prevented from being present at your marriage. I now welcome you with a blessing, and pray that upon entering this palace, she may lay aside her veil, that I may behold the beauty which the people are raving about."

At these words Isabella shrunk a little, but she in courtesy drew aside the veil which she had drawn over her features upon leaving the cathedral, and displayed to the bold gaze of Ludovico her exquisite lovliness.

"Blessed mother!" exclaimed Ludovico, "I have been in many lands, beheld the choicest beauties of many climes, but all charms fade before the resplendent loveliness of the Duchess of Milan. The feast is prepared, and the guests wait—a double feast they will have." So saying, Ludovico led the way to the banquet hall.

Weeks passed, even months, and ever following the beautiful bride, was the tall form and dark face of Ludovico the Moor. If she rode, Isabella was sure to meet her husband's uncle, ever felt his dark treacherous eyes bent on her face, looking the unholy admiration which he dared not express in words. Isabella began to feel afraid of this man, who followed her so like a shadow; a shudder always passed over her as she heard his rich, insinuating voice. Giovanni noted nothing beyond the admiration Ludovico seemed to have for the beautiful duchess, and thought nothing of it.

Up a dark, winding staircase, up and up, to the very top of a tall house, carefully crept a muffled figure. Carefully creeping upward, and ever and anon looking behind suspiciously, went this dark man. Arrived at the top of the stairs, he knocked at a small door in front of him. A long time spent in impatient, fruitless waiting, and he repeated the summons, and this time more boldly.—Upon the instant of the second signal the door opened, and a little, withered, ill favored old man made his appearance, and asked fiercely:

"Who disturbs me at this hour?"

"One who wishes to consule your science."

"Too late. Go home. Come when the sun shines fair and bright upon all the gay earth, and not come like a night-hawk. Go home."

"No time like the present," camly answered the stranger, standing firmly in the doorway.

"Dark deeds must be done in darkness. No sun can lighten your black heart—Walk in."

This the old man muttered, as he ushered the stranger into the room, then closed and locked the door behind them.

"Your words are ungracious, old man," said the strnnger, hoping by his ease of manner to gain ease of mind.

"Cavil not at my words if you wish my aid. Be seated."

The new comer looked about him, and seeing only one chair, he hesitated to occupy it, but a sign from the own made him take it. It was a strange room into which he was ushered. High dark walls covered with all sorts of fiendish pictures, bones, tailsmans, trophies, everything fearful and revolting; in each corner, standing upright in a dark coffin, each coffin surmounted by a large stuffed raven, grinning hideously, were skeletons.—Bones, skulls, stuffed birds and reptiles of every variety now hung round this fearful room. In the centre of the apartment stood a large table, covered with black velvet, upon which were embroidered in silver and carmine, calabistic signs. Upon this table lay a huge volume, bounded in deep red velvet, and fastened by silver clasps, bearing strange devices. This den was dimly lighted in the day time by two narrow, slit-like windows, and now by a single lamp suspended above the table. This room was the abode of Calistro the famous Moorish sorcerer, who had of late come to work his wonderous spells in Milan, and had already gained a most wonderful influence over the superistitious Milanese, from the poorest peasant to the highest noble.—People of all ranks consulted him, and bought charms and spells of him, and had their fortunes told.

Calistro seated himself upon the huge carcass of a stuffed crocodile, and from some secret hiding place, grinning and chattering, came an impish little black monkey, who perched himself beside his master on the head of the reptile. The master, small, ill-favored, and malicious, looked hardly unlike his pet monkey.—When both stranger and magician were seated, the latter turned to the former, and spoke, while he fixed upon him his searching, restless eyes.

"What brings you here, my friend?"

"I wish your aid."

"In what way? Shall I tell your fortune, or that of a friend?"

"Neither."

"Neither? You are wrong. You may not care to know each event of life, but you would know the end of that life. Is not death, Sir Stranger, the consummation of everybody's fortune? I cannot pass beyond the grave."

"I spoke not of death."

"You might have done so just as well. If I can read in the stars the destiny of each human being who comes to me, can I be blind when reading the faces of men, when each passion engraves a line deep in the face, when the eyes—you need not lower yours, for I have read the tale they tell—speak to me? You come here to gain the wherewithal with which to rid you of a troublesome relation, Ludovico Sforza."

At the mention of his name, the stranger turned pale, and sprang to his feet.

"Be seated," coldly said Calistro, with a malignant smile. "You should not be startled at hearing your own name. I will do your bidding, but bofore I give you all you require, you must give me that seal ring you wear; that I request, so that should I need you I can send a messenger who will be accredited. The second thing is also simple. You must sign this paper. Read it."

"I promise to give to Calistro, Moorish sorcerer, half of that which he aids me to gain. I give him the casket."

"That is simple enough, surely, Signor Calistro," said Ludovico, smiling scornfully.

"I am glad you think so, and hope when the time of payment comes you will find it still as easy. This paper you must sign with your blood."

"Cheerfully, willingly will I sign," said the wicked Ludovico, as he thought of the prize he was to gain. "When the time comes," thought he, "we'll see who loses in this game."

"Roll up your sleeve—there that's enough—a small incision—your blood flows readily—now for the pen—quick, ere it dries!"

So spoke the little, dark, impish physician and sorcerer, and the bold, reckless Ludovico Sforza wrote his name in deep red characters on the paper. The magician took the paper, and unclasping the book of magic upon the table placed it between the leaves, and again closed the volume. That done, from a quaint little cupboard he took several minute bottles, from each of which he poured a few drops into an empty bottle in a rich filagree case which stood upon the table. When he had completed the mixture he handed the silver-cased bottle to Sforza, saying:

"Go, now. This liquid, which is perfectly tasteless when mingled with wine, and perfectly colorless, will produce death. Five drops each day, and in three months your victim will pass away to another world, and none to say, nothing to prove who sent him there. Increase the dose—give ten drops instead of five, and in half the time he who swallows it will die. Increase the dose still more, and in less time Giovanni Galeazzo, Duke of Milan, and husband of the loveliest woman in all Italy will be beyond your power to work him good or ill. Know now that I know you and your victim. Beware how you seek to deceive me, or play me false, your life will be the forfeit. Go!"

Without a word, Ludovico Sforza took the fatal bottle, and fled down stairs, without daring to look behind him, trembling at what he had done, but never swerving from his purpose. Could he have heard the low chuckle which followed him, Ludovico would have been less sure of getting the best of the bargain.

"Fool, fool! The compact is made, and well he rue it. Ha, ha, ha! Isabella of Naples will feel what it is to scorn an Italian. Because I was homely, withered and old before my time, she scorned my suit. I, an Italian nobleman, wealthy beyond count, she refused. She let her beautiful eyes express surprise, then pity, and then, O heavens, as I urged my suit, she scorned me! She didn't say so, but I saw it in her eyes, those glorious eyes. I saw her beautiful lips curl, and those bewildering eyes grow dark with scorn as she refused me, the Marquis of Spasi.—What fools the world contains! By the aid of a little native wit and shrewdness, these hideous skulls, pictures, stuffed birds and reptiles, I pass for a magician, and fool even the intelligent. Do I not know Ludovico Sforza the Moor? Tyranical, selfish, envious and unprincipled, I read his vile thoughts, as disguised like a beggar I lingered near the portal of the duke's palace. I could have killed Ludovico for gazing so boldly upon the beauty I never can possess. I saw his surprise as he grzed on Isabella's blushing face. I read his desire in his eyes, and the look of hate he cast upon the lucky duke. Not in vain have I watched him day by day, and seen the hatred deepen, and the desire of passion grow each day more powerful. The poison I gave him is sure if science can tell anything. Ludovico Sforza will give the ten drops, and in three weeks the Duchess of Milan will be a widow. Sforza, you are fool! Half of what you gain is mine. Ha, ha, I will take the body, the beautiful casket, and if Ludovico can gain possession of the soul without injuring the body let him do so. He has pledged the casket."

A few weeks and the Milanese mourned like one great family—Giovanni Galeazzo, the loved Duke of Milan, was dead. He had rapidly faded away before their eyes. Each day on the balcony he grew paler and weaker; at last he came there no more to receive the welcome of his people. Pale and tearful came the adored, the lovely Isabella, and the people learned each day from her wan face how the duke was. At last she came not at all, the balcony was draped with black, a great grief fell upon the people, for their loved master was dead, the brave, generous duke. A great lamentation filled the city. A dark, sad day it was for the devoted Milanese when the vault closed over all that remained of Giovanni Galeazzo. Isabella was tearless.

With tears and kind offers, Ludovico Sforza came to her, and rage filled his hear when he saw that she scorned him. Isabella distrusted and feared him, and in her own mind resolved to rid herself of him. One day he came to her, and being inflamed by her beauty, he gave vent to his admiration in the following words:

Isabella, beautiful creature, my heart burns within me. The words will come. Have you been blind to the love which nearly consumed me while Giovanni lived?"

The words struck terror to her woman's heart. She was fully convinced now of the truth of her suspicions that Giovanni had died an unnatural death. Rising in her wrath and indignation, Isabella quivering with passion exclaimed:

"Go, vile assassin, murderer, and pollute this place no more! Go, before I kill you, for I would dare do anything now." And so speaking, she drew a glittering dagger from her bosom.

Foiled, beaten back for a time, Ludovico retreated. Open war was between them now, and she would feel his power. The next morning, Isabella, Duchess of Milan, had disappeared. Furious, Ludovico Sfronza rushed to the magician's den. No clue could he gain there.—Calistro thought that his frenzying was mere acting on the part of Sforza, done to blind him to his acts, Sforza thought the same of Calistro. Insulting words passed between them. Swords were drawn. and Calistro fell. Ludovico sought night and day for the lost beauty, but could gain no trace of her. One night as he returned from one of his vain searches, he heard a step behind him, and the next instant he was stabbed from behind, and fell dead upon the pavements. Few were sorrowful when the news of the assassination spread abroad. Out from her sanctuary, which was a convent near Milan, came the beautiful, sad duchess, fearing nothing now, since the death of the bold LUDOVICO THE MOOR.

A PARISIAN QUACK.—At the theatre of the Varietes there is an actress, one of the best in Paris, who has the misfortune to be exceedingly, deplorably thin—we might almost say scrawny. A short time since, she heard of a doctor, who, it is said, had succeeded in manufacturing a mineral water which had the power of making people grow fat. She went to him instanter.

"Doctor," said she, "what must I do to get fat?"

"Take my waters."

"And shall I get fat?"

"Immediately."

The thin actress plunged into the doctor's baths, and drank the water early and late. Three months passed away, but she grew no fatter. At last she called the doctor, and said:

"Doctor I don't grow fat."

"Wait a little while," replied the doctor.

"Will it be long?"

"Fifteen days at the farthest. You see that big, fat woman walking in the garden. When she first came here, she was, perhaps, thinner than you."

"What! I may hope?"

"Fifteen days at most," said the doctor.

Two more months passed; the actress grew thinner and thinner. One day, as she was taking her warm mineral bath, she heard a dispute going on in the bathing-room next to her own.

"Decidedly, doctor," said the big, fat woman above introduced, "decidedly, doctor, I don't get a bit thinner."

"Have patience, madame," said the doctor; "you see that very thin lady who sometimes walks in the gauden!"

"Yes."

"Well, she is an actress from the Varietes, whose excessive fat forced her to absent herself from the stage; she came to me—you see the result. Before fifteen days I promise you shall be thinner than she is."

At these words the thin actress rose from her warm bath, dressed herself, and with a heart divided by grief and indignation, silently left the house, hoping, to keep her misfortunes a secret; but in Paris a secret is an impossibility, and somehow or other the story got out.

THIS line fills the column.

KNIGHT'S LANDING NEWS.

OFFICIAL COUNTY PAPER.

SATURDAY, MARCH 24TH, 1860.

We would very respectfully call the attention of our readers to the New Advertisements of this week. Messrs. Baker & Hamilton, Agricultural Warehouse; Justin Gates & Brothers, Druggists; F. Werner's, Stallions Rattler and Trustee; Eaves & Nye's, Second Grand Lyric and Dramatic Entertainment; and Hooker & Co's. Hardware Store, in Sacramento.—We have several other New Advertisements which we are unable to insert this week, on account of being too late, that will appear in our next issue.

Indians Out.

On last Monday evening the good and orderly people of our town were thrown into no little commotion, by the appearance of some forty Indians, dressed and accoutered in costumes and habiliments of War, and all the paraphernalia and trappings thereunto belonging; added to which were faces as grim and bellicose as tigers.

The fears of the people were quickly appeased by the "Old Capitaine" assuring the people that the Indians intended no harm to the pale faces; but were bent on revenge against "Capitaine Harry" of Fremont, for killing ono of their tribe some time ago.

It appears some few weeks since a parcel of the Colusi Indians were down in this vicinity and met with the Fremont Indians, when and where Captain Harry become enamored with one of the Colusi Indian's wife, the latter refusing to sell, swap or to trade her off, whereupon old Harry became highly incensed against, and slew said Colusi Indian outright!

The Warriors proceeded to the Fremont Rancheria and arrested "Old Harry" and took him to Hock Farm Rancheria for trial, from which we have not yet heard the result of their adjudication.

E. B. Davidson, of the Post Office Literary Exchange, Fourth st., between J and K, Sacramento, has our thanks for the following Magazines and Newspapers. Harper's Magazine, Gody's Lady's Book, Illustrated London Times, N. Y. Herald, New York Tribune, Louisville Journal, Missouri Republican, New Orleans True Delta, Scientific American, Yankee Notions, Nicknax, Pickles and sundry others. Also, De Groots Map of the Washoe Mines. At Mr. Davidson's can be found all the Newspapers, Magazines and Scientific Works published, both in the Atlantic States and Europe, arriving by every steamer of the latest dates.

Shot.—We learn from a dispatch to the Bee that on Tuesday night last, about 12 o'clock, Harry Mighles, editor of the Marysville Appeal, while endeavering to quell a disturbance between two drunken men, was shot through the fleshy part of the left thigh. The wound is painful but not serious.

On Wednesday last Judge McAllister ordered a decree to be entered affirming the decree of the Board of Land Commissioners in case of the United States vs. M. J. Vallejo et al. The case involves in the title to Vallejo, Benicia and the valuable Government Reservation.

The Placerville and St. Joseph Overland Telegraph Company have now completed their line to Virginia City.

By the Last Overland Mail.

From the Union's Telegraphic Report we clip the following:

Bids for Overland Mail Service. The House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, have instructed their Chairman to report a bill directing the Postmaster General to advertise immediately for propositions for carrying the entire mail between California and the East overland, by such routes as the bidders may designate in their bids; the letters to be carried semi-weekly in twenty days, and the newspaper mail weekly in twenty days; also, to supply Denver City and Salt Lake by branch lines. Bids are to be received by the 1st of May, and submitted to Congress for acceptance or rejection. It is proposed that the contract shall be for three years from July next. Bids for more or less frequent service will also be received.

The Bill also invites bids for similar service from New Orleans and New York, semi-weekly and weekly.

Republican National Convention. The time of meeting for the Republican National Convention at Chicago, has been changed from the 16th of April to the 16th of May.

Cemetery.

For some considerable time, we have thought of saying something upon propriety and necessity of having a Cemetery or burying ground laid out and set apart for this place. Heretofore, we have felt our inadequacy and incompetency to portray its importance and merits fully and satisfactorily. We have waited anxiously and hopefully, desiring that some one better qualified for the task would step forward and contribute us an article upon this subject.

Believing the present time as opportune, as, any other ever will be, and fearing that no one will assist us in breaking the subject to the citizens of this town, we will endeavor to present a few thoughts upon it for the consideration of those interested in the matter.

We presume that there are few amongst us who do not feel more or less interest in regard to this subject. Under the present arrangement of things, whenever we are so unfortunate as to lose one of our family or friends by the hand of death (into whose grim and relentless grasp we all will ere long have to pass), we are necessarily compelled to carry their remains some five or six miles out into the country, and deposit them at a place that is both bleak and lonely, and of inconvenient access to those that would like to visit that sad but hallowed spot. There are few but what desire at times to visit the burying ground of their once dear friends and relatives; especially is this the case with mothers. With what profound solemnity and melancholy pleasure (if it can be called by that name) do they hasten to the graves of their dear departed ones, and there unburden their pent up feelings, surcharged with the bitterest wormwood of human anguish!

This thing of burying our dead away from our place, where we seldom can go and spend an hour in seriously reflecting on their virtues, on death and immortality and on our own imperfections and unworthiness, has a bad tendency on our better natures. It takes away from us one of the most useful monitorial lessons, perhaps, in the whole pages of the dealings of Providence to man.

It appears to us that some one, ere this, should have moved in the initiative and brought the subject directly to the attention of the people.

We have often remarked, privately, that it was a burning shame that Knight's Landing could not afford ground enough for burying its dead; we now speak it publicly. In this land of gold and excitement the minds of the people seem wholly absorbed and engrossed in the accumulation of mammon, to the neglect of all other considerations.

The moral obliquity of the mass is truly heart-sickening! They appear to be in a measure lost to those finer and nobler emotions and feelings of the soul—that chaste and refined sensibility of thought and action for which the truly polished American is characteristic seems to be in no small degree obtunded and blunted. We are now speaking of Californians generally, and do not wish to be understood as saying anything disparagingly of the citizens of Knight's Landing. We merely offer it as an apology for their seeming neglect and indifference on the subject under consideration.

Now, why is there not a Cemetery here?

Can not there be a suitable lot or parcel of land set apart and dedicated to that purpose?

Can not there be a sufficiently high and eligible spot procured in or about the town?

Would not the present owners of the land be willing to either sell or donate a portion of the land for that purpose?

We believe that all the foregoing interrogatories can be unhesitatingly and truthfully answered in the affirmative.

Then why not move in the premises and get to action? There certainly is no just cause for delay.

We think that a few acres set apart for a common grave yard is what is wanted. We like to see burying places so constructed that all can find a resting place for their dead—the poor and the stranger as well as the rich. Grave yards should be common to all, for in death we meet on a common level—titles, wealth and distinction are of no avail in the grave.

Can not there be a meeting called at as an early a day as possible to take some steps in the premises?

Who will first move in the matter?

By the use of eye-glasses, you may see as much as is to be seen; by the use of another kind of glasses, you may see twice as much.

Sacramento Correspondence.

SACRAMENTO, March 21st, 1860.

EDITOR OF THE KNIGHT'S LANDING NEWS,

Dear Sir:

Laboring under the impression that a few lines from the Levee City would not come amiss, I proceed to dot down some of the items as they have come under my observations.

This morning, after the roll was called in the Assembly, the youthful Representative from El Dorado, Mr. Fairchild, rose to a question of privilege, but was informed by the handsome Speaker (see De Dharto Telegram!) that he was out of order and could only rise to questions of privilege after the House had devoted two hours to the general file.

The Bill introduced by Mr. Sawyer, of San Francisco, an Act to authorize the formation of joint stock associations for savings, deposit and discount, was brought up to-day and elicited considerable discussion, in which the able Representative from Yolo, Mr. Gwinn, took an active part against the passage of the Bill; after an interesting debate the Bill was finally killed by striking out the enacting clause.

The Fee Bill for Los Angelos county came up and was made the special order for to-morrow, at half past one o'clock. This is a family quarel between King and Warner, of Los Angelos. After some business of minor importance was disposed of the hour for the special order arrived, to wit: A Bill providing for the construction of the State Capitol in the City of Sacramento, introduced by Mr. Conness, of El Dorado. After considerable discussion and some pretty sharp talk between Messrs Conness, Bailey, of Tuolumne, Burson, of Humboldt, and the gallant gentleman of Trinity, the whole subject matter was made the special order for Friday next.

With scarcely a doubt, the Assembly will pass a bill to appropriate money for the purpose of building a State Capitol; but, Mr. Meritt, of Mariposa, introduced a bill in the Senate, after which Mr. Conness introduced one of the same kind in the House, and both bills were made the special order for to-day, and the House laid the whole matter over to see what action the Senate would take in the matter. I have just learned that the Senate postponed the matter until to-morrow, for further consideration.

ALTURAS.

Late From Washoe.

The Territorial Enterprise, of March 17th, gives the following intelligence and advice:

We must reiterate what we have so often said, that more people are coming over here than either the richness of our mines, or the demands of any legitimate business will warrant. We desire and hope that all who can spare the time and money, will come and see for themselves. But there is no use for those who are comfortably fixed in California, that have a home with all endearments, to come over here. Not but what we have now, and will have, good homes here; but it requires time and money to get them.—All who intend coming here should bear in mind that provisions cannot be got here to feed them, for some months yet. Our mines are permanent, and those who so insanely follow every excitement are not those who make the most money.

THE amount of treasure shipped by the steamer Sonora on Tuesday last amounted to $1,287,136.

THE Buffals Republic states that Mrs. Ellen Waldron, whose husband was killed about two years ago on the Buffalo and State Line Railroad, has just recovered from that company $2,000.

POETRY.

Our Schoolmaster.

BY ALICE CAREY.

We used to think it was so queer
To see him in his thin, gray hair
Sticking our quills behind his ear,
And straight forgetting they were there.

We used to think it was so strange
That he should twist such hair to curls,
And that his wrinkled cheek should change
Its color like a bashful girl's.

Our foolish mirth defied all rule,
As glances, each of each, we stole,
The morning that he wore to school
A rose-bud in his button-hole.

And very sagely we agreed
That such a dunce was never known—
Fifty! and trying still to read
Love-verses with a tender tone!

No joyous smile would ever stir
Our sober looks, we often said,
If we were but a schoolmaster,
And had, withal, his old, white head.

One day we cut his knotty staff
Nearly in two, and each and all
Of us declared that we should laugh
To see it break and let him fall.

Upon his old pine desk we drew
His picture—pitiful to see,
At last, as tired as we could be,
Upon a claybank, strangely still,
We sat down in a row to see
His worn-out hat come up the hill.

'Twas hanging on a peg—a quill
Notched down and sticking in the band,
And leaning against his arm-chair still,
His staff was waiting for his hand.

Across his feet his threadbare coat
Was lying, stuffed with many a roll
Of "copy-plates," and, sad to note.
A dead rose in the button-hole.

But he no more might take his place
Our lessons and our lives to plan!
Cold death had kissed the wrinkled face
Of that most gentle gentleman.

Ah me, what bitter tears made blind
Our young eyes for our thoughtless sin,
As, two and two, we walked behind
The long, black coffin he was in.

And all, sad women now, and men
With wrinkles and gray hairs, can see
How he might wear a rosebud then,
And read love verses tenderly.

A YANKEE DINNER.——Both Englishmen and Americans are noted for the medley they make of their different meals. On one occasion a Yankee traveler, at a table d'hote, had thus heaped up his plate with a variety of incompatible dishes, when a Frenchman who sat beside him, and had been for some time observing his proceedings with wonder, at length with a look of bewildered stupefaction asked: "Pray, sir, am I to understand that that," pointing to a heap, "is a dinner?" The Yankee saw through the Frenchman's affected simplicity, and replied: "Stranger, I guess you're a goin' for to try for to bamboozle me; but I calkilate I'll soon wear you up to the stump, I will. Jist let me git you within fifty yards of the muzzle o' my rifle, and your friends 'ill find nothing left of you but a spot of grease upon the wall."—The duel took place that evening, outside the ramparts. The Frenchman was shot through the lungs; when the Yankee, struck with remorse, ran up, and stooping over his antagonist, asked him with emotion if there were anything he could do for him. "Yes," gasped the dying man, "there is. Tell me—was it really—really now—a dinner?" A gush of blood choked his uttterance, his eye became fixed, and he died in ignorance of the mysterious fact.—Reynolds.

"SALLY," said a young gent, preparing to take a snooze, "if any one calls, tell them I'm gone." Gone where, sir?" "Gone to sleep."

A WRITER on ornithology inquires what kind of eagles fly highest! We don't know; but unquestionably golden eagles generally fly fastest.

BULWER says that "death often changes aversion into love." Certainly it does We may have an antipathy to swine and yet love pork and sausages.

"IS IT possible, Miss, that you don't know the names of some of your best friends?"

"Certainly, I do not even knew what my own may be in a year from now."

AN individual was arrested the other day while endeavoring to pick a gentleman's pocket. He said he wasn't used to the business, and was just trying to get his hand in.

"How comes it that your milk is so warm this morning, sure?" asked Bridget of the milk man. "Don't know, honey," replied the milk vender. "Guess our cows must have got sun-struck."

AN "Ingin" and a white man were passing along Broadway, New York, when the former espied a window full of wigs, and pointing to the owner standing in the dorway, said, "Ugh—him great man—big brave, take many scalps!"

A SMART young man visiting a prison in Maine, inquires of some of the prisoners the cause of their being in such a place. At last he asked a young girl the cause of her being in prison. Her answer was "that she stole a saw-mill, and went back after the pond and was arrested." The young man left immediately.

A TEACHER wishing to explain to a little girl the manner in which a lobster casts its shell when it has outgrown it said, "What do you do when you have outgrown your clothes? You throw them aside, don't you?" "Oh, no!" replied the little one, "we let out the tucks!"

Rrgged Jem, A Judge.

"Oh, dear!" sighed a half-starved, ragged little boy one cold, chilly night in the fall of 1826, as he sat, or rather half-reclined on his elbow, on the cold, damp step of one of the large, fine houses in New York city; "how I wish I had only one of them nice cakes in that window."

And as he half-muttered to himself, his dark tearful eyes watched the well-filled window of a large baker's shop.

There he sat, hour after hour, with no friend to comfort him, and no warm bed to sleep in. The only friend he had, as he thought, was his Heavenly Father, for his mother had died the day before from starvation, and now he was left an orphan to wander all alone through that large and wicked city.

Soon, however he fell asleep, and his troubles left him for a time. He slept long and soundly. At last he was awakened from his sleep by the sound of a large clock striking five. The streets were very still, and there was not the same noise and commotion that there is on other mornings, for it was Sunday.—There he sat, rubbing his eyes as though he were taking his morning bath.

Presently some one pulled him by the coat, (or what might have once been called a coat,) and said,—

"Come, Jem, wake up, it is long past daylight, and I am getting hungry. If you will come with me, I will tell you where we can get plenty to eat, for I saw a shopman shut his blinds without once looking them."

Jem looked up in real astonishment.—"Will he give us something?"

"No; we can hook it, you know; and he won't miss it, I know."

Jem looked up slowly and said firmly,—"I shan't steal, and you can't make me any more, for I promised my mother, just as she died, I wouldn't. You may go, but I shan't."

Jack hung his head and said nothing. Soon, however, he muttered to himself.—"You may starve to death, but i shan't." then, raising his voice, he cried, "Hurrah! I'm going, anyhow, to get something to eat."

Jem walked,off in the opposite direction, whistling to himself, "Home, sweet home."

The bells were ringing for Sunday school at 9 o'clock. Jem happened to be passing St. Paul's chapel, and as he saw the boys and girls going in, he thought he would like to see the church; so he entered, but not without first taking off his cap, and wiping his bare feet before he touched the step.

One of the teachers saw him, and asked him if he came to school? He was so much frightened he did not answer; but he put him into a class with the other boys.

After the session was over, the teacher came and closely questioned him, and finding him so honest and upright, he took him home and gave him his breakfast, and then learned from him his whole history.

The teacher's father, a celebrated lawyer of that city, happened to be in want of an office boy. Jem accepted the offer of the vacant place, and kept his employer's office neat and clean, and was soon sent to school for instruction. He made the very best use of his time, improved very fast, and was soon admitted into the office as clerk. He studied, became a proficient in law, kept up his habits of strict integrity and honor, was finally made a partner in the business of his employer, and in this year of grace 1859, is one of the most popular judges in Western New York.

This little incident, dear children, shows us that integrits wins its reward even in this world

Jack was detected in his wickedness, and sent to a place of confinement to learn that "the way of transgressors is hard."—Childrens' Magazine
